

Morgan – Global Gen Z Digital Ethics & Marketing Leader (CAB Persona)

Professional Snapshot

Morgan is a 25-year-old digital-native executive who embodies the emerging Gen Z leadership archetype. In this composite profile, she combines the roles of Chief Marketing Officer, Head of Digital Ethics and Trend Forecaster at a global consumer-tech organisation. She synthesises early signals and trends from APAC, Latin America, Africa and Europe – not to represent those markets directly, but to surface behavioural, ethical and technology shifts that increasingly shape customer and citizen expectations in the UK and Ireland. Morgan grew up in the smartphone era – Gen Z is “the first generation with no memory of life before smartphones” – so she treats digital connectivity as second nature. In her day-to-day role she drives brand strategy and customer experience while ensuring new technologies (like AI) align with ethical standards. Her education is interdisciplinary (business and social sciences) and she co-founded a youth-driven digital forum on responsible innovation. Colleagues describe Morgan as purpose-driven and analytical: she’s often the one to ask, “How will this decision affect our customers and communities?” – reflecting her habit of linking marketing strategy to real-world impact and values.

Operating Context

Morgan operates at the intersection of marketing, technology and social impact. She sits on a diverse executive team in an organisation that prizes innovation, agility and social responsibility. Her remit spans fast-moving global consumer trends (from sustainable e-commerce in Europe to mobile-driven engagement in Africa and Asia), so she is constantly consulting youth communities and social platforms for insights. Like many Gen Z professionals, Morgan thrives in a flexible, tech-enabled work environment – she uses video calls, social collaboration tools and AI dashboards fluidly, mirroring the fact that Gen Z “seamlessly integrate digital tools” into their routines. Her peers include product managers, data scientists and social impact officers, and she often works as a bridge between them. In board settings, Morgan brings an external network of younger consumers, academics, and activists into the conversation, ensuring that strategic discussions stay grounded in what emerging customers around the world care about – especially as those behaviours influence the expectations of UK-based users, citizens and talent.

[Remaining content continues as in the original persona]